PUBLIC PARTICIPATION HEARING

Verizon and Frontier Joint Application (A.24-10-006)

Verizon and Frontier Joint Application (A.24-10-006)

In October 2024, Verizon and Frontier filed Application (A.) 24-10-006 with the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC or Commission) to request approval of Verizon to acquire 100 percent of Frontier and its California subsidiaries.

How might this transaction affect you?

The proposed transaction would potentially impact any customer of Frontier. According to Verizon, the proposed transaction will generate significant economic benefits for California ratepayers and extend additional service plans to many current Frontier customers, including a national low-income broadband plan and bundled service options. Consumer advocates argue that the proposed transaction may not benefit rural and disadvantaged customers and want Verizon to meet certain conditions before approving the transaction. The last page of this fact sheet is a map of Frontier's service areas that Verizon plans to acquire, which are spread across California.

How will the Commission review the Application?

The review of this transaction by the Commission is guided by California Public Utilities Code Section 854. This law requires the Commission to look at several important factors that affect the public. These factors include whether the deal makes financial sense, maintains good service quality, treats employees fairly, is environmentally friendly, and ensures that benefits are shared fairly. The Commission will also consider how the transaction impacts customer choice and whether it offers long-term advantages for everyone involved.

The Commission will review whether the transaction would keep or improve the reliability of services, especially during emergencies or power outages, and whether it changes any of Frontier's legal responsibilities. The Commission will look closely at whether the transaction might influence customer choice especially in rural areas where there are fewer service providers. Additionally, they will assess whether the economic gains are distributed fairly among customers. If the Commission approves the transaction, they may set specific conditions to ensure that consumers are protected.

How would Frontier's existing obligations be affected?

Frontier has numerous previous obligations that would transfer to Verizon if the transaction is approved. These include Frontier's Carrier of Last Resort (COLR) obligations and commitments made during Frontier's 2021 bankruptcy such as broadband fiber deployment targets and service quality improvements. Frontier also has ongoing obligations related to state and federal grants. According to the Application, Verizon will assume all of Frontier's existing regulatory obligations. The Commission will review whether Verizon has demonstrated it can and will meet these obligations.

What is a Carrier of Last Resort (COLR) and what role does it have in this proceeding?

A Carrier of Last Resort or COLR, is a company that provides basic telephone service to anyone who needs it in a specific area of California. This is important because it makes sure everyone can access reliable, affordable essential phone service. Every household in California has a designated COLR, with Frontier being the second-largest provider. Basic phone service can be delivered using any technology — like traditional landlines, internet-based phones, or wireless services (not just copper wire) — as long as it meets the state’s minimum service standards.

The Commission is currently looking at possible updates to the rules for COLRs. The Commission is considering changes that would clarify how these companies must serve all customers, what qualifies as basic service, and under what circumstances a company might be allowed to stop providing this service. Information Sessions for Tribal Communities

In addition to the PPHs, the Commission has asked Verizon to offer dedicated information sessions for Tribal leadership and community members at request. These sessions are designed to: share details about the proposed transaction in a culturally respectful setting, listen to Tribes’ unique concerns and perspectives, discuss potential impacts on telecommunications services in Tribal communities, and explore opportunities for improved infrastructure and connectivity that respect sacred lands and cultural resources.

If you wish to arrange an information session, please contact:

Darlene Brugnoli, Vice President, Tribal Relations Liaison, Verizon Communications
